Full details are available on the Limbus website: www.limbus.org.uk Abstract: This document will be an exploration of motherhood and childhood today. The article proposes that the way the mother and the way we look at children have undergone a change in the last 20 years. Drawing on Arange's sociological research and clinical practice of authors, Sally Sales suggests that there has been an intensification in the field of child relationships embedded by a social and personal concern with risk. Risk assessment now dominates parenting practices and childhood has become a heavily monitored area of intimate life. What kind of children are we growing up and what kind of experience has it become in these new conditions of vigilance and danger.
